Apollo was not only the god of the sun, but of healing and music. René Laennec, inventor of the stethoscope, may have gotten his inspiration by listening through the end of his flute. Nobel Peace Prize laureate Dr. Albert Schweitzer funded his hospital in Lambarene, Gabon by performing organ concerts throughout Europe. Throughout history, music and medicine have always been intertwined.

What has changed? How can we bring the arts and sciences back into balance? How can we bring harmony back into medical education?

Lisa M. Wong, MD, President of Longwood Symphony Orchestra Dr. Lisa Wong is a pediatrician, musician, and author dedicated to the healing arts of music and medicine. She has been a pediatrician at Milton Pediatric Associates for the 25 years and is a clinical instructor in Pediatrics at Harvard Medical School. In April 2012, she published her first book, Scales to Scalpels: Doctors who practice the healing arts of Music and Medicine, in collaboration with writer Robert Viagas.
